

HelioGrid Visual System Notes - 2026 paid social

Working guide for current residential energy communications. This file defines identity, color, asset handling, and campaign guardrails; it does not identify the campaign product, reporting region, or sales result.

1. Identity and color

HelioGrid should feel dependable, clear, modern, and optimistic. Avoid both fear-led disaster copy and exaggerated certainty. Use simple homeowner language when explaining storage, solar, backup, and energy insight concepts.

Token	HEX	Primary use	Notes
HelioGrid Blue	#0B5FFF	buttons, badges, headers	should be the clearest accent
White	#FFFFFF	main content surfaces	keeps paid social open and clean
Energy Teal	#00A887	secondary emphasis, energy-flow lines	supporting accent only
Deep Navy	#12304A	body text and current wordmark	preferred text color

Do not use a red-dominant campaign field. Small red status indicators may appear inside raw technical source materials, but red should not become the creative background, CTA color, or main brand accent.

2. Wordmark and identity usage

Use the current 2026 wordmark treatment when a logo is needed. The retired sunburst mark may appear in archived source files, but it should not be used as the active identity for new paid-social creative.

Identity	Status	Paid-social instruction
HelioGrid wordmark, deep navy	Current	Place in the top-right safe area when a product hero appears on the right or lower half.
Sunburst icon lockup	Retired	May appear in legacy archives only; do not make it the main logo for 2026 campaigns.

3. Product and lifestyle imagery

Use real product-style photography or carefully cropped installation photos. Product imagery should feel tidy and residential, not like a disaster scene or a dense engineering diagram. Raw technical reference photos are useful for analyst review, but campaign hero images should come from the approved asset register.

Example visual direction: clean residential battery/storage hardware, simple wall or garage context, no exaggerated sparks, smoke, lightning, or catastrophe cues.

4. Copy guardrails

- Lead with usefulness and confidence rather than fear.
- Do not invent prices, exact savings percentages, warranty lengths, installation timing, or backup durations.
- Avoid dense acronyms unless a plain-language explanation appears nearby.
- Educational guides may support general explanations, but product-specific claims must come from the claims register.

5. Layout notes for feed posts

For portrait feed placements, keep the logo in the top safe area, place the headline in the upper third, keep the hero product or lifestyle image in the middle-to-lower zone, and reserve the lower third for the call to action. Use no more than one small badge for sales context.
