Brand Positioning

HelioGrid presents clean residential energy as dependable, modern, and easy to live with. The brand should feel technically credible without becoming cold, and optimistic without becoming playful or childish.

The visual world is built around reliable home backup, modern solar storage, and calm confidence during everyday energy moments. Launch compositions should feel polished and spacious, with a clear sense of product purpose.

Color System

The palette is anchored by a clear technical blue, clean white space, and a green pulse accent. Blue communicates trust and grid intelligence. White keeps the system breathable and residential.

Light blue neutrals and soft gradients may support depth, but the overall impression should remain bright, clean, and controlled.

Logo Use

The HelioGrid mark works best in a clear area with enough breathing room to preserve legibility. Keep it away from busy product details, dense copy, and low-contrast

Visual Language

Preferred imagery includes modern homes, solar panels, compact battery hardware, soft residential lighting, and refined product presentation.

Layout Tendencies

A strong launch layout usually opens with a clear title area, gives the product or residential energy scene the central visual weight, and reserves the lower area for action-oriented information.

The reader should understand the product category quickly before reading details. Maintain generous spacing around important copy so the image still reads clearly in a social feed.

Use the brand guide as a source of tone and visual guardrails. Use campaign copy, platform dimensions, and deprecated asset guidance from their more specific env files.

Style Boundaries

Avoid alarmist outage imagery, disaster visuals, red-dominant emergency looks, comic styling, cartoon mascots, and handwritten or casual script typography.

Avoid layouts that feel like legacy sales flyers, cluttered spec sheets, or raw asset boards. The launch asset should feel current, refined, and ready for a consumer-facing social channel.

Typography

Use modern sans-serif typography with confident scale contrast. Headlines should be precise and direct. Supporting copy should be calm, readable, and visually secondary to the main product message.

Production Notes

For social launch graphics, keep essential elements away from the canvas edge and preserve a clear hierarchy across the title, visual, logo, and action areas.

Treat asset manifests as visual direction unless a concrete file is provided. When other files provide campaign copy, platform dimensions, or deprecated asset guidance, follow those more specific instructions.

This guide defines brand feel and visual guardrails rather than the final launch copy or a mandatory poster layout.
