Resident focus

renters, older adults, and neighborhood volunteers in the Eastside flats

Program update

The public walk was renamed after resident advisors pushed for language that sounded practical rather than emergency-driven. Earlier strings remain in the project folder for continuity. The communications team should treat this as a small field operation with a public-service tone, not a sponsor event.

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Poster implication: choose the practical resident actions, the public lead, and the confirmed time; do not decorate the poster with internal incentives or staging constraints.

Resident advisory notes

The walk is for households that may need low-barrier heat resources and for volunteers who can check routes before the next heat wave. Advisors asked that outreach materials avoid fear-based language and emphasize useful neighborhood actions.

Audience: renters, older adults, and neighborhood volunteers in the Eastside flats

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Route board draft

Captains should mark shade, rest stops, and refill points. Do not publish exact staging locations until assignments are confirmed. Route maps in the binder are working sketches; poster copy should describe what residents will do, not where teams will stage.

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

Training card copy

A short script helps volunteers ask about cooling access without collecting sensitive health or income information. The training card is written to be practiced before the walk and shortened for any poster treatment.

- Map shaded rest stops and water refill points

- Practice a door-to-door heat check-in script

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

- Take home a cooling resource card for neighbors

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Poster implication: choose the practical resident actions, the public lead, and the confirmed time; do not decorate the poster with internal incentives or staging constraints.

Print handout note

Each participant should leave with a small resource card summarizing cooling centers, water access, and phone numbers. The card is a takeaway for neighbors, not proof of benefit eligibility.

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Operations scratchpad

June 27 was a staffing placeholder. Northline Energy, gift cards, venue TBA, and cap of 40 are not public copy. These details remain here so staff do not accidentally revive them from old route drafts.

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Poster implication: choose the practical resident actions, the public lead, and the confirmed time; do not decorate the poster with internal incentives or staging constraints.

Public language handoff

Use the office name, the July 18 walk window, and the three resident-facing actions; keep logistics compact. The poster should read like an invitation to help neighbors prepare, not like a government meeting agenda.

Appendix: archived labels

Summer Safety Canvass; Heat Check Day; Cool Streets Sprint. These names were tested in staff review but rejected because they sounded either too broad or too emergency-branded.

Field note

Use resident-facing verbs and keep route logistics out of the poster unless they are publicly confirmed.

Review comment

If a detail is marked placeholder, sponsor hold, or captain-only, it should stay out of the public image.

Status cautions

June 27 morning walk; Northline Energy sponsor; gift cards; venue TBA; cap of 40
